THE BIVOOUAC
OF THE
DEAD

THE muffled drum's sad roll has beat
The soldier's last tattoo;
No more on life's parade shall meet
That brave and fallen few.
On fame's eternal camping ground
Their silent tents are spread,
And glory guards, with solemn round,
The bivouac of the dead.

The BLUE and the
GRAY

By the flow of the inland river,
Whence the fleets of iron have fled,
Where the blades of the grave-grass quiver,
Asleep are the ranks of the dead;
Under the sod and the dew,
Waiting the judgment day;
Under the one, the Blue,
Under the other, the Gray.

No more shall the war-cry sever,
Or the winding rivers be red,
They banish our anger forever,
When they laurel the graves of our dead.
Under the sod and the dew,
Waiting the judgment day;
Love and tears for the Blue,
Tears and love for the Gray.

Foreword

TIME heals all wounds and banishes all differences to naught. But the memory of men and deeds—men who gave their lives in deeds for a cause in which they honestly believed—goes on into indefinite generations.

Those now living, on either side of the civil conflict of half a hundred years ago, once foes, are now friends; for each knows the sounds and scenes of battle; each knows the heroism of the other.

Both were men.

Both were inspired by the patriotism of a cause, and were possessed of those qualities which made this nation great, which have since added to its greatness, and which are now destining it to freedom full blown.

The roar of battle in that conflict is over forever.

The tramp of the feet of men, and the fall of horses' hoofs, on the return march from war, and to homes in peace, are now still.

These are but a dim memory even to those now living.

Books of adventure and history, that record men in their deeds of heroism, may remain on their shelves unopened to the present younger generation and those to come.

Flowers, on the mounds of the now silent heroes, wither and fade away.

But the permanent memorials that the living heroes erect, in commemoration of their deeds, and those of their fallen comrades, will withstand time and all elements.

They will stand in silence, but a visual reminder to this and coming generations; to the throngs that pass in the activities of peace, who will remember and reverence, for all time, those who fought and fell in war.

SHEET metal is now a standard material for the expression and execution of the sculptor's art, the same as stone and cast metals. By the processes we have worked out the final artistic success is a question of the original model rather than one of mechanical execution, and just as is true of the older materials.

Every line and shadow of the original model is exactly executed, with all the beauty in texture of either cast bronze or copper, and with no spirit of imitation or the statue pretending something that it is not.

Full artistic precedent for this method and material is in the fact that the statue of Diana, Madison Square Garden—Augustus St. Gaudens, sculptor; and the group on the New York Life Insurance Building, New York City, Philip Martini, sculptor; also the two quadriga groups on the Wayne County Building, Detroit Mich., J. Massey Rhind, sculptor, besides many others are of this material and were executed by us.

In this catalogue the statuary shown is from models by our own sculptors in our own plant. We are therefore fully prepared to specially model all classes of statuary; including portrait subjects from photographs, correct in likeness to the individual, so that a complete commission for the execution of a statue will be carried out with absolute assurance of satisfactory final results.

Sheet copper and sheet bronze statuary being much lighter than cast bronze and the process being comparatively simple, we are enabled to produce artistic results far more economically than by other processes.

Photographs and samples will be submitted when requested, to assure our clients of the artistic merits and mechanical efficiency of our work.

Our statues are executed in sheet bronze and copper only, and prices with specifications will be given upon application.
