FORT ID: Quaker Cannon

In order to help dissuade potential attackers, some Union soldiers shaped and painted logs to make them look like cannons from a distance. [New paragraph] Since these "cannons" could not fire, they were called "Quaker" cannons after the Quakers, a peaceable religious group that generally declined to fight. [New paragraph] Since Fort D was rarely threatened it may be that the soldiers building the "cannon" were simply fighting boredom by having fun at the expense of their opponents. Their real cannon were enough of a threat.
